By Dan Marz

President Adelé Adams will be taking the role of Acting Dean of Faculty next term, which will be her last term as president. She has served in this capacity for the last two years. The move comes as a result of the new responsibilities placed on the faculty by the academic program.

The search for a permanent dean will begin immediately, with a committee composed of faculty members and administration selected to oversee the process. The committee will be responsible for interviewing and evaluating candidates for the position, with the goal of finding a qualified替换者 to lead the College.

Staff Grapples with Evaluations of Non-Academic Positions

By Paul Leary

One of the key areas being examined is the role of the administrative assistant. The current assistant is being evaluated to determine if her skills and experience match the requirements for the position.

Faculty member of the Search Committee for the new dean, Dr. Cheryl Lupton, said, "We are looking for a candidate who is a strong leader, a collaborator, and someone who can guide the College through this transition period.

The third division of the Amherst College athletic program is in full swing, with teams competing in various sports. Despite the challenges, the athletes are staying focused on their goals.

The Final Frontier

No longer are the division's battles fought on the field. The teams are now competing in the world of technology, with a focus on developing innovative solutions.

In the end, it is not about winning or losing, but about creating and growing. The teams are working hard to achieve their objectives, and the results are impressive. The division is on the cusp of something special, and the future looks bright.

Liberal Corporation or Radical Collective: Two Models for a College

The problem of whether to support a liberal or a radical collective is a concern for many college students. The issue is often debated in the context of whether a college should be governed by a liberal or a radical collective. The liberal collective advocates for a democratic decision-making process, while the radical collective advocates for a more direct and participatory approach. The following discussion presents the arguments for and against each model.

Part One: Liberal Corporation

The liberal collective model is based on the principle of cooperation and the defense of democracy. It is a model that is more familiar to most students, as it is similar to the governance structure of many existing universities. The liberal collective model is characterized by representative democracy, where decisions are made by elected representatives of the student body. This model is often seen as a way to ensure that the voices of all students are heard and that the needs of the majority are met.

Part Two: Radical Collective

The radical collective model, on the other hand, advocates for a more participatory and direct democracy. It is based on the principle of self-management and is characterized by direct participation in decision-making. The radical collective model is often seen as a way to empower students and ensure that their voices are heard and that their needs are met. However, it is also seen as a way to ensure that the voices of all students are heard, regardless of their representation in the student body.

The choice between the two models is often a matter of personal preference and the values that one holds. The liberal collective model is often seen as a way to ensure that the voices of all students are heard and that their needs are met. However, it is also seen as a way to ensure that the voices of all students are heard, regardless of their representation in the student body.

...and finally, one more or an arse in the causing of the "formation" of the American Federation of Labor. In the philosophy of the AFL, maximum efficiency is now a solid, but not always well-grounded, proposition. It is a question of whether or not we can find a mechanism for the effective control of the labor movement. To this end, the AFL is seeking to establish a labor council which will provide a forum for discussion and the exchange of ideas. The council will be composed of representatives from each of the major labor organizations, and will meet on a regular basis to discuss the issues of the day. The AFL believes that this council will be an important step in the development of a more unified and effective labor movement.

Carrol Gonzalez
P.S. I also have some ideas on the subject of "collective bargaining" that I think could be useful. The AFL is working on a plan to establish a system of collective bargaining that would recognize the rights of the workers and the employers. This system would provide for the negotiation of wages, hours, and employment conditions in a fair and equitable manner.

This drawing from the pages of Mark’s sketchbook was inspired by some event that went on in Hampden’s past. For a copy of Boy Flick’s Fiction Music album, what was the inspiration? The first person to contact an editor with the correct answer will be the official winner. P.S. Sorry but the album is already overseas. We reviewed it early in the semester.
