Winter Graduation

CORA WEISS:

by Mirinda Neubert

Cora Weiss, presently working with Beverly C. Charter, Director of the Dean's Office, is preparing for her graduation. While singing for her graduation, and undoubtedly contributing to the struggle for peace and justice, she has written the following letter to the editor. It is entitled "No" and "Yes" to the war. She explains
the meaning of the two words, the war, and discusses the difference between them. She also gives an example of how "No" can be misleading and how "Yes" can be misleading.

The meaning of "No" is that there is no
motion, no action, and no progress.
"No" is a negative word that means "not wanted." The meaning of "Yes" is that there is motion, action, and progress. "Yes" is a positive word that means "wanted."

The difference between "No" and "Yes" is that "No" is a word that is used to deny something, while "Yes" is a word that is used to affirm something.

In conclusion, the author of this article states that "Yes" is a word that should be used more often than "No" in order to promote peace and justice.

Pompous Circumstance

by Rebecca Smith

"I was too political," I said. "It's not a serious subject." "It was too long and boring," said my roommate. "I was too young and inexperienced," I said. "I was too shy and unconfident," she replied.

But I knew better. I knew that I needed to speak out. I knew that I needed to take a stand. I knew that I needed to choose between "Yes" and "No"
and that I couldn't afford to be too political. I knew that I needed to be brave and honest and true. I knew that I needed to be myself.

So I spoke. I spoke my mind. I spoke my heart. I spoke my truth.

And I'm glad I did. I'm glad I spoke.
I'm glad I chose "Yes."
Hypocrisy and Human Rights

by Chuck Collins

Our government’s support of American-plantations in the Philippines and Mexico, the same time our president expressed moral outrage in other cases, raises the questions of human rights issues in these two countries. In both cases, the administration has been criticized by human rights groups. In Mexico, the government has been accused of human rights abuses, including torture and murder, while in the Philippines, the government has been accused of corruption and human rights violations.

The recent actions by the Philippine government are not new, but they are becoming more widespread. In recent years, there have been widespread allegations of human rights abuses in the Philippines. These abuses include extrajudicial killings, torture, and disappearances. The government has denied these allegations, but human rights groups have continued to document them.

In Mexico, the human rights situation is also difficult. The Mexican government has been accused of human rights abuses, including the use of torture and extrajudicial killings. The government has denied these allegations, but there is a growing consensus among human rights groups that they are occurring.

The problems of human rights abuses in both countries are not new, but they are becoming more widespread. The government’s actions in both countries are not acting in a manner consistent with human rights principles. The government’s actions in both countries are not acting in a manner consistent with human rights principles.
Campus Politics: Just another mode of Inquiry

by Austin Fleckman

Did you know that it’s possible to be your own best expert? Well, ask anybody in the know.

You are the expert in your own life, and this is something that you can use to your advantage. For instance, you can use your knowledge of yourself to help you make decisions that are better for you. You can also use your knowledge of yourself to help you understand others, and to help them understand you.

So, the next time you need to make a decision, try to be your own best expert. It’s the right thing to do.

The College’s并不是the newspaper by which students and faculty are read and commented on the political, economic, and social issues of the day. It is a source of information for the community at large.

Choi, an advocate of the Peace Commission, was murdered in response to her support for the movement for nonviolent resistance in South Africa. Most reactions to her tragic death were the result of a violent police crackdown on the protesters. The police shot at least 50 people, and at least 30 people were wounded. The Peace Commission, which is an umbrella organization of nonviolent groups, is demanding an independent investigation into the incident.

The Peace Commission, which is made up of mainly peace groups and social movements, is demanding that the incident be investigated. The police have cited their response to the protests as a necessary measure to maintain public order. However, the Peace Commission argues that the police response was disproportionate and that the protesters were not posing a threat to public safety.

The Peace Commission is calling on the government to ensure that the incident be investigated independently, and that those responsible for the violence be held accountable. The commission is also calling on the government to end the use of live ammunition and to respect the rights of peaceful protesters.

Excerpts from the Proposal for Divestment from Weapons Producers
by Chock Collins, Dana Rudberg

The proposal for divestment from weapons producers is a significant step towards addressing the issue of military spending and the arms trade. The proposal calls for the divestment of institutional investments from companies that produce weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons, cluster munitions, landmines, and other weapons of mass destruction.

The proposal is based on the argument that the arms trade and military spending are a significant contributor to global instability and conflict. It also highlights the role of institutions in perpetuating the arms trade through their investments.

The proposal calls for the following actions:

- Divestment of institutional investments from companies that produce weapons of mass destruction.
- Advocacy for policies that limit the arms trade and promote disarmament and non-proliferation.
- Support for initiatives that promote peace and conflict resolution.

The proposal is supported by a number of organizations, including the World Doctors, the International Peace Bureau, and the Global Peace Foundation.

The state of New York is in crisis as the budget cuts continue to impact the state’s ability to provide essential services to its citizens. The governor has proposed cuts to education, health care, and social services, which are expected to result in significant job losses and reduced service levels.

The cuts are part of a broader effort to address the state’s budget deficit, which has been driven by a decline in revenue due to the economic recession. The cuts are also intended to reduce the state’s debt burden, which has grown significantly in recent years.

The cuts are expected to have a significant impact on the state’s residents, who are already facing economic challenges. The governor has promised to work with the legislature to find alternative solutions to the budget deficit, but the cuts are likely to continue in the short term.

Colin said he did not regret the decision to go to war. He said, "I knew that we had to fight for what we believed in and that it was right." He also said he did not regret the decision to join the army, as he said it was a necessary step to help the country.

The military has been criticized for its use of force in the Middle East and in other parts of the world. Colin said he did not regret his decision to serve in the military, as he said it was a necessary step to help the country.
